RED DEER HOSPICE

Where Compassion
Builds a Home

Considering
Hospice
Care?

Our facility offers sixteen private resident rooms. Each room is equipped with a hospital bed, a half bathroom and a living room style seating area with a pull-out couch for family members or loved ones who wish to spend the night.

The rest of the house is designed to feel like home with a variety of quiet places for residents, families and visitors to reflect, talk, read and connect.

Common areas include comfortable living and sitting rooms, reading areas, family rooms, a dining room and kitchen as well as a sunny multi-purpose sanctuary.

How are Hospice residents admitted?

The admission process to the Hospice starts with a conversation with your physician, charge nurse or home care nurse. Assessment and referrals are carried out by Alberta Health Services palliative care nurses.

Can loved ones visit? What about pets?

There are no formal visiting hours at Red Deer Hospice; our door is always open. Well behaved pets are also welcome to visit during the day.

How is Hospice staffed?

Professional nursing care is provided 24 hours a day as well as companionship, bereavement and spiritual support. Our staff specialize in end of life care.

Your family physician (or alternate) is always available to us for consultation and medication management.

What does it cost to stay at Hospice?

There is no fee to stay at Red Deer Hospice and no one is ever denied care due to financial limitations. A portion of our operating costs are covered by Alberta Health Services, however, as a not-for-profit society, we depend on donations and fundraising efforts to meet our annual operational budget. We rely on and appreciate all donations.

When is it time to bring someone to Hospice?

It is time for hospice when:

- The individual is seeking end-of-life comfort care with no extraordinary measures,
- The individual or family cannot manage at home or do not plan on a home death; and
- The individual or family do not want hospitalization.
